

Practical Course in Communication and Leadership

Rich Derksen

Effective communication and leadership skills are foundational components of success in today's rapidly changing world. This course will teach the building blocks of effective oral communication skills, including presenting prepared talks, the art of giving helpful feedback, facilitating events, and learning to think on your feet by practicing extemporaneous speaking. The focus will be on giving students the opportunity to learn by doing, and thus give each of them a significant competitive advantage in both an academic and corporate settings. This class is designed for students 14 and plus.
